

Meet Winslow Farm's Littlest Lions

New Residents at Winslow Farm

Winslow Farm recently took in five Lionhead rabbits, a mother, father, and their three young ones, who were all living in a cramped cage. The male rabbits were not neutered, which in time would have created even more rabbits in an already cramped living space. Thankfully, we were contacted about this situation, and the rabbits were brought to Winslow Farm.

Two of the male rabbits have now been neutered, and we will have the other male neutered and the two female rabbits spayed soon. We would be grateful for any donation towards their neutering and spaying costs, as well as for their continuing care.

What is a Lionhead Rabbit?

Lionhead rabbits have a furry mane around their heads, reminiscent of a male lion. They are very friendly, intelligent rabbits, but also can be skittish.

Feeling More At Home

We can already see their distinctive personalities, with Sheldon being curious, outgoing and interested in exploring. Dandelion is content to stay in the hutch. Cola is not quite ready to go exploring too far, but takes a few tentative steps to go beyond her hutch.

Eventually, all the rabbits will feel comfortable exploring their new, larger environment. They are currently sharing living space with Orion, our white elderly peacock, and George, our tortoise. Cosmo also enjoys hopping up onto George's shell.

Winslow Farm feels very fortunate to be able to give a home to this wonderful family of rabbits and is looking forward to watching them enjoy their new freedom—beyond a life lived in a cramped cage.
